Mrs. Carter is one of the seven daugniers of Mrs. Bridget Egan, who died at Greensburg. Pa. about a menth ago. Mrs. Egan at the time of her death was over ninely years of age, and was in many ways a remarkable woman. She belonged to a good old Irish family. Early in meshe went to Pennsylvania with her husband, and for fifty years she lived in Greensburg. Her son, Frank Egan was nent to college, and while pursuing his studies became well acquainted with Janes G. Blaine. Young Egan stoned law, and settled in San Antorio, Tex., when that city was miles away from a railroad. The young man was prosperous, and soon owned a large amount of property in the Texas city.

He was taken sick and went home and died. His mother assumed control of the property, and the problem with her was to get the gold home. She finally hit upon the pian of putting the metal into sacks, which were bound about her chest. In this way she succeeded in setting the money to her Pennsylvania home, but the weight of the metal upon her chest gave her heart disease, with which she was always troubled after making the journey.

"One cause is that the rivers that drain them are constantly wearing the earth away and gaining a deeper bed. But the chief cause is the constant decrease in rainfall on the Southern half of the continent. In times of drought, such as we have now in Ontario, vast akes and flowing rivers, though exposed for mouths to a burning sun, convey no moisture to the atmosphere, and the fields, even to the water's edge, are scorched as if by fire.

Now the telegraph and telephone wires that form a network across its path over the Western states, carry off its electric energy, and not only is the vapor it contains precipitated on these regions, but it is unable to reload itself with vapor on reaching the Great Lakes."

The Professor says that in 1887 he visited those parts of Ontario where the drought was so disastrons during that an expansion of the control drought was so disastrous during that year, and subsequently reported to the Dominion Government that the telegraph wires were the cause, and pointed out that when Western Ontario would become ruined by drought, the Ottawa Valley would enjoy copious showers from electric clouds that would come over the northern hills and forests beyond the wire belt, and would flow down on the northwest current.
